

FOR TIMES WOMEN WHO WANT TO KNOW

What Is Seen in The Shops

BY THE SHOPPER.

The June bride in all her loveliness is to be seen in the window of the Palais Royal this week, and in all of the departments devoted to the sale of woman's wear, special price concessions have been made in articles intended for her trousseau.

Clad all in white, with a filmy veil enveloping her figure, the bride is shown attended by her bridesmaids, maid of honor, and her two flower girls, who have been fitted with white, the bridesmaids precede her, wearing white lingerie gowns, and picture hats, trimmed in colors. The honor maid is also gowned in white, and there are touches of black velvet about her costume. The tiny little flower girls wear lace frocks, and all carry clusters of flowers.

Inside the store and especially in the lingerie department, everything necessary for a trousseau is to be found. Sets of three, four, and five pieces are offered at exceptionally reasonable prices, beginning at $25, and from $25 up to $25 for the domestic sets, and from $10 to $40 for the French convent made sets, trimmed with hand embroidery and insets of Cluny lace. In single pieces, the choice is well high exhaustive. For $5 there are 150 styles of gowns, and for $10 there is an exquisite silk and linen crepe de chene gown, trimmed with linen lace, through which is run a dainty white ribbon. All-silk crepe de chene gowns, elaborately trimmed with Cluny lace, are $25, and combinations of the same material are priced the same. These garments, The Shopper was told, wash even better than China silk, and are softer and possess more body than the latter. Beautiful negligees in dotted Swiss are shown, which range in price from $15 to $25. There are also negligees trimmed with val, Cluny and other laces and embroideries. Little boujee caps to match these negligees are selling at 50 cents, and from this price up to $1. There are also the sheer cotton crepe sets, which possess the added advantage of being easily laundered. These come in white, also pale blue, pink, and lavender, and white with tiny floral designs. These are priced from 50 cents a garment up to $1 for the larger pieces.

Framed pictures at 25 cents are being offered by an F street department store this morning. The pictures are all reproductions of well-known art subjects, and some of them are colored by hand. The frames are in dull brown and black, and are very excellent value.

A white crocheted bag is being offered in the leather goods department of a 3 street department store for 50 cents. This bag is well lined, and has a cord handle. Nowadays the summer girl tries to have a bag to suit every suit, and the white crocheted bag with the all white suit adds just that finishing touch that is necessary to make a perfect toilette.

The shopper has discovered a place where women's Panama hats may be reshaped and reblocked for 75 cents, and where the work is quickly and satisfactorily done. This same establishment, which is located in Ninth street, not far from G street, blocks women's straw hats into the latest shapes, for the same price.

Prettily trimmed hats in straw and lace, with ribbon bows, wings, and flowers are offered in an F street millinery store, near Twelfth street, for 35 cents. A number of these charming hats are shown in the window today, and inside the store there are many others, all at the same price.

The little Cosmopolitan apronettes or waists, which are made of lace, chiffon or embroidery, and which add so much to a plain gown, are being sold in a G street department store for $1.50 up to $15.00. Some are made of all over lace, elaborately trimmed with velvet ribbon and lace edging, and others are fashioned from all over embroidery, net or plain material, tucked and edged with bands of lace. Velvet and crystal buttons trim some of them.

CHAPTER VII (Continued).

"HE goes!" cried Banks as he reached for his check book, and the others followed suit.

Pens scratched. Mr. Danforth smiled.

"If you would just as soon make them out to me personally—Charles Danforth!" he suggested. "It will be handier."

"She goes again!" Banks puffed out from the side of his mouth which the cigar didn't occupy, as he tore out the check and handed it over.

"I wonder if I could have those certified tonight?" speculated Mr. Danforth.

"Gimme a telephone, waiter!" said Mr. Banks.

He called up one of the day-and-night institutions and directed that certain checks payable to Charles Danforth be certified on presentation within an hour. He received, presumably, assurances that the job would be done in time, and then he said:

"Whereupon Danforth vanished like a happy and beautiful dream and Banks leaned back in his chair and said:

"That's a good night's work! That means a billion a year for all of us, for some time to come. The bank is stopped. There seemed to be a commotion behind him, and the others were smiling broadly.

He turned, and there was Dr. Rausenfeld, just hurrying aside six waiters and forcing his way to the table. He came to it with a pocket book, and dragged back a chair and settled himself quiveringly.

"Gentlemen, he cried.

"Well! Taste sat back and laughed merrily. "Have some champagne, old man!"

"I cannot—cannot drink!" explained the doctor agitatedly. "I come to say to you of the something dreadful, gentlemen! For you in the particular, Mr. Banks! It is that—that Seaman, my man with those light hair—you have antagonized him, Mr. Banks! You have told him when you should ask him, Mr. Banks! You have attacked him with the speech, Mr. Banks, and you have asked him for the treatment and instead because of the anger which is growing within him, he gave you the antidote for the treatment! He made you spend money—not save it!"

"Hoarrry for him!" yelled Banks.

"And more as that!" pursued the doctor. "I have discovered—now, too late—to the extreme regret, that my treatment reacts—that it turns back around the way you say and when it wears off the man spends more money as ever before!"

loping furiously on his own account. A bugle was blowing somewhere as the others hurried after him, and it must have been the last call, for just as Rausenfeld gained the door the champagne plank was drawn in suddenly and the thirty gentlemen on the wharf were left to stare at their hearts' content as the big boat began to warp out.

They did it.

They rolled fifty-dollar bills into pellets and shot them at the departing figure in the darkness by the rail.

They produced gold pieces and hurled them at the departing figure, and as he noted that Dr. Rausenfeld gathered them all together and stood on them.

And then, amid a frenzied chorus of cheers, the steamer gained motion and drew out.

AN EPILOGUE.

An epilogue is always a senseless sort of thing.

Sometimes, however, like a good many other senseless things, it is necessary. Therefore this epilogue.

Mr. Banks sat in his usual chair before the writing table. The noonday sunshine streamed down on him. His head ached. He felt rather odd. Indeed, in a word, he felt just as he did when he felt normal. He felt odd.

Harris sat in another chair, opposite. Harris was puzzled not so much because his employer was glowing, but because the bills hadn't been paid yesterday. Harris sat and meditated on that all night long.

"Harris!" said Banks.

"Yes, sir," said Harris.

"Send for Jenkins!"

Jenkins was sent for. He came presently and winked at Harris.

"How much money was in my clothes?" asked Banks. "I told you to look."

"Forty cents, sir!" said Jenkins.

"Are you sure?"

"Yes, sir," said Mr. Banks.

And that out of twelve thousand dollars! And that out of twelve thousand dollars! And that—

"What had struck him last night, anyway? It certainly had not been drink, because Banks was used to that sort of wine. Moreover, he had hardly touched it, and—

"Harris!" said Banks.

"Yes, sir," said Harris.

"See what Consolidated Cold Water is quoted at this morning!"

"Consolidated—Cold—Water, sir?" The secretary gasped aloud.

"Certainly. See what it's quoted at."

"But Consolidated Cold Water went into the hands of a receiver yesterday afternoon, sir," said Harris. "It was shown up altogether. There was nothing in it whatever and that man—Danforth—wasn't that his name?—has been lost track of this morning completely!"

Banks looked up, rather faintly.

Harris said: "Go and call up the bank and see whether a check I gave Danforth yesterday has been paid. Go off somewhere where I can't hear you and call up."

Harris left.

He was back within five minutes smiling.

"Yes, sir," he said. "The check was paid all right, and several others with it, the teller said. That is, your check was paid in full by the Day-and-Night people, and some others were fixed so that Mr. Danforth could collect them this morning, first thing. He has not turned up."

Something in Banks' face stopped him short. Harris faded into his little chair and wondered.

Banks didn't wonder. He knew! He simply sat in his own chair and stared—and stared—and stared—and stared at the door.

Once in a while, you know, there are occasions wherein you can do nothing but sit and simply stare at the door. This was one of the occasions.

ABLE TO RESTORE LIFE, Is Physician's Claim

BOSTON, Mass., May 26.—Dr. Walter B. Cannon, professor of psychology at the Harvard medical school, has perfected a scientific means of bringing back the departed spark of animal life. He declares that if the new method should be employed in each and every case of death a large percentage of the supposed inanimate bodies could be revived.

The method consists of the introduction of a tube or catheter into the pharynx, pulling up the tongue, forcing the back part of it against the roof of the mouth by pressure applied back under the chin, putting a weight on the abdomen to keep air from being forced into the stomach, connecting the catheter with a bellows and pumping air into the lungs.

Dogs, cats, and rabbits have been temporarily deprived of life and brought back to a normal condition by Dr. Cannon. It is many experiments the thorax was widely opened and the heart was freely exposed. No shock was observed in any case. In some cases the artificial seven minutes until heart beat artificially ceased to beat.

Mother Saves Child From Vicious Dog

Three-year-old Robert Crawford, colored, son of Mrs. Mary Crawford, of Garfield Heights, was seriously injured yesterday and only escaped death by the heroic efforts of his parent when attacked by a large dog in the rear yard of his home.

The mother was also badly bitten, when on hearing the cries of her child she ran to his assistance and found the dog tearing furiously at his clothing. She found that the dog had bitten the child in many places about the hands and face. Only the quick response of the mother to the mother and child's cries of distress saved the two from probably fatal injury. The dog evidently rabid, was killed.
